THEME: "TRANSFORMING EDUCATION"

A. RATIONALE OF THE CELEBRATION

On 17 December 1999, in its resolution 54/120, the United Nations General Assembly endorsed the recommendation made by the World Conference of Ministers Responsible for Youth (Lisbon, 8-12 August 1998) that 12 August be declared International Youth Day (IYD).

Since the adoption of Security Council Resolution S/RES/2250 (2015) in 2015, there is growing recognition that as agents of change, young people's inclusion in the peace and security agenda and in society more broadly, is key to building and sustaining peace. Another Security Council Resolution S/RES/2282 (2016) reaffirms the important role youth can play in deterring and resolving conflicts, and are key constituents in ensuring the success of both peacekeeping and peacebuilding efforts.

The first IYD was observed on 12 August, 2000. It is an awareness day designated by the United Nations. The purpose of the day is to draw attention to a given set of cultural and legal issues surrounding the youth. Further, IYD declaration encourages youth around the world to organize events to raise awareness about the situation of the youth in their respective countries. It is an opportunity for governments and others to draw attention to youth issues worldwide.

B. RATIONALE OF THE THEME

The theme of International Youth Day 2019, "Transforming Education", highlights efforts to make education more inclusive and accessible for all youth, including efforts by youth themselves. Rooted in Goal 4 of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development – to "ensure inclusive and equitable quality education and promote lifelong learning opportunities for all" – International Youth Day 2019 will examine how Governments, young people and youth-led and youth-focused organizations, as well as other stakeholders, are transforming education so that it becomes a powerful tool to achieve the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

Inclusive and accessible education is crucial to achieving sustainable development and can play a role in the prevention of conflict. Indeed, education is a 'development multiplier' as it plays a pivotal role in accelerating progress across all 17 Sustainable Development Goals, be it poverty eradication, good health, gender equality, decent work and growth, reduced inequalities, action on climate or peaceful societies. Education should lead to relevant and effective learning outcomes, with the content of school curricula being fit for purpose, not only for the 4th industrial revolution and the future of work, but also for the opportunities – and challenges – that rapidly changing social contexts bring.

The crucial role that quality education plays in youth development is well recognized. In addition, comprehensive youth development benefits society-at-large. However, what is less known is the fact that young people themselves are active champions of inclusive and accessible education. Youth-led organizations, as well as individual youth, together with various stakeholders and Governments, are concretely transforming education so that it becomes a fundamental tool both for sustainable development and for the full inclusion of various social groups. For example, youth-led organizations are transforming education via lobbying and advocacy, partnerships with educational institutions, the development of complementary training programs, etc.

In that spirit, a multitude of stakeholders – including youth-led organizations – are also coming together to work toward greater access to education; addressing barriers for youth on the basis of gender, identity, abilities and other criteria; updating school curricula to include lessons about peace, justice and the environment and climate change, among many other areas.

Statistics such as: only 10% of people have completed upper secondary education in low income countries, 40 % of the global population is not taught in a language they speak or fully understand, and over 75 % of secondary school age refugees are out of school, remind us that significant transformations are still required to make education systems more inclusive and accessible. In addition, indigenous youth, young people with disabilities, young women, youth from various marginalized groups, etc. are facing additional challenges to access education that respects their diverse needs and abilities as well as reflects and embraces their unique realities and identities.

Therefore, International Youth Day 2019: Transforming education, will highlight good practices and lessons learned in efforts to ensure education is inclusive and accessible as well as the road ahead for partners in this endeavor.
